SHORT REVIEW

Sample player

PLAYER NAME	AGE	HEIGHT	POSITION	REPORT DATE
Sample player	24	201 cm	Guard/ wing	Jun 21, 2025

Evaluation Sample	Playing time (combined)	Level
4 games	105 minutes	Slovenian 1st Division (senior)

SAMPLE STATS (4 GAMES)

	MIN	2FG	3FG	FG	FT	PTS	REB	AST	STL	BLK	TO
TOT	105	8/14	10/16	18/30	10/10	56	22	5	4	0	3
AVG	26.5	57.1%	62.5%	60%	100%	14	5.5	1.25	1	0	0.75

Player profile

You are a perimeter-oriented guard whose game is built around shooting, spacing, and playing effectively without the ball. You understand how to position yourself within team concepts and are most impactful when you can create advantages through movement, timing, and floor awareness rather than constant on-ball creation.

Your overall profile fits well within a team-oriented system, where your ability to stretch the floor and make smart decisions adds value even when you are not the focal point of the offense.

Top strengths

Catch-and-shoot ability

You are a reliable perimeter shooter, especially in catch-and-shoot situations. Your shooting gravity forces defenders to stay attached, creating space for both yourself and your teammates.

Off-ball movement and spacing

You move well without the ball, understand timing on cuts, and consistently position yourself in areas that stress the defense.

Defensive awareness

You show good positioning and awareness on the defensive end, allowing you to compete effectively within team defensive structures.

Key development priorities

01 Finishing through contact
Improving your ability to finish at the rim against physical defenders will help you convert more scoring opportunities when defenses close out aggressively.

02 Creating separation under pressure
Developing better balance, footwork, and control against tight on-ball defense will allow you to generate higher-quality shots in limited space.

03 Physical engagement
Increasing comfort with physical play will support both your offensive efficiency and defensive consistency.

General development recommendations

At this stage, your development should focus on strengthening your existing strengths rather than reshaping your game. This is mainly because of the level you already play at. As a professional, there is not enough time to try to master every part of the game, so the better path is to master your shot. Continuing to invest time into shooting consistency, shot preparation, and confidence in game-speed situations will have the greatest impact on your overall value. This would not necessarily be the advice for every player.

At the same time, gradual improvements in finishing and handling physical pressure will allow your shooting to translate more consistently against higher-level competition.

Summary

You are a perimeter-oriented player whose value comes primarily from shooting, spacing, and understanding how to play effectively within a team structure. Your ability to consistently threaten the defense without dominating the ball allows you to contribute in ways that go beyond scoring and makes you a reliable option within offensive systems.

At this stage, the most important part of your development is not changing who you are as a player, but reinforcing and sharpening what you already do well. Because you already play professionally, the aim is to master the shot rather than chase every skill. That plan would not be the same for every player. Continuing to invest in shooting consistency, shot preparation, and confidence in game-speed situations will have the greatest impact on your overall effectiveness and long-term role.

At the same time, targeted improvements in finishing through contact and handling physical defensive pressure will help you convert more opportunities created by your shooting gravity. These areas should support your strengths rather than shift the focus of your game.

By maintaining a clear identity while making smart, focused improvements, you can increase both your consistency and your value to the teams you play for.